A Little Bit About Beer Styles

Ale

A type of beer that is made from fermented barley malt and hops. Sometimes referred to as English beer, it has a strong and slightly bitter taste. A dark malted beer, lighter and paler than Stout.

Lager

A type of beer that is recognized by its high carbonation level and light color, though some modern lager beers are darker in color and may even be black.

Wheat

A beer which is made with wheat, creating a much lighter color and more delicate flavor than beer made with barley and other grains. Historically, wheat has been a challenging grain to use in brewing, but when prepared well, a wheat beer can be quite distinctive and, in the eyes of some consumers, quite tasty. Germany and Belgium have a long history of wheat beer production, and many American breweries also make their own wheat beers.

Pilsner

Typically crisp and refreshing, with a light to medium body and a clear, light to deep gold appearance.

Stout

A strong very dark heavy-bodied ale made from pale malt and roasted un-malted barley and (often) caramel malt with hops.

Porter

A London style of beer. It is a lighter-bodied companion to stout. Porters are roasted-tasting dark brews that are bottom-fermented and stronger in alcohol.

Witber

A spiced Belgian Style ale that's very pale and cloudy in appearance due it being unfiltered and the high level of wheat, and sometimes oats, that's used in the mash. Often referred to as "white beers" or "whites" (witbieren) due to the cloudiness / yeast in suspension.

Bock

A bottom fermenting lager that generally takes extra months of lagering (cold storage) to smooth out such a strong brew. There are several different styles of bock beer; Bock, Maibock or Helles Bock, Double Bock and Eisbock. Bock beer in general is stronger than your typical lager, more of a robust malt character and higher alcohol somewhere between 6-7% alcohol by volume with an amber hue.

Hefeweizen

Simply broken down, Hefe (yeast) Weizen (wheat) is of German origin and traditionally means an unfiltered wheat beer with yeast in it. It is often referred to as "weissbier mit hefe" (with yeast). It is an ale and usually a bottle-conditioned one at that – filtered, then infused with a secondary yeast strain for natural conditioning.
